

Does the battery system of the car need to be without load for the moment of the analysing pulse measurement? Like standing/parking or so?

No. The car does not have to change its situation. It can continue to consume, or not.

The measurement can be carried out at any time, without this measurement interfering with anything.